Inglês como a língua da Ciência e Tecnologia

English Is the Language of Science and Technology

98% of all scientific articles published today are in English.¹

80% of information stored on computers is in English.²

Science and technology connect the world and drive innovation in virtually every industry. Production, communication, trade and commerce are all directly impacted by new and emerging technologies. This continuous innovation relies on a rapid, global interchange of scientific and technological ideas: and the language used in these fields is almost exclusively English.

Programas Governamentais de Estímulo ao Inglês como Formação Profissional

Government Mandates Promote English Worldwide

Nations around the globe are instituting broad federal programs to increase English proficiency. In Rwanda, all primary education must now be taught in English. Brazil's English Without Borders program provides English language training for undergraduate and graduate students. The Russian Federation now requires all civil servants to be fluent in English, and Japan recently made learning English compulsory in all of its primary schools. Why are these nations investing so much in English proficiency? To prepare citizens for employment, attract foreign investors, and gain a stronger international presence.
